Medical Networks and Panels

Access to quality medical care is a critical component of an effective workers compensation program.

Understanding Your State’s Requirements

The Medical Networks and Panels flyer provides an overview of medical network and panel requirements across multiple states, helping employers understand how injured workers access care and what responsibilities may apply before or after an injury occurs.

Review the Medical Networks and Panels Guide

Because workers compensation medical treatment rules vary by state, employers should understand the specific network or panel requirements applicable to their locations. This resource outlines BHHC’s medical network arrangements and panel requirements for states including California, Texas, New Jersey, Georgia, Pennsylvania, Tennessee, Virginia, and Colorado.

The guide explains key distinctions between Medical Provider Networks (MPNs), Health Care Networks (HCNs), Managed Care Organizations (MCOs), and physician panels, including when employee notifications or panel postings may be required.

Need Additional Assistance?

For additional resources, medical network information, and policyholder tools, visit BHHC.com. Navigate to the Injured Workers section to access state-specific provider network resources and related materials.

If you have questions regarding medical provider networks or panel requirements:

- California: Contact MPN@bhhc.com
- Outside California: Contact ProviderNetworks@bhhc.com

For broader workers compensation safety, prevention, and injury management guidance, policyholders may also contact BHHC Loss Control at LossControl@bhhc.com.

> Medical treatment requirements vary by state. Use this guide to better understand medical network and panel requirements and help ensure injured employees have access to appropriate care.

Understanding your state’s requirements can help support timely medical treatment and compliance with state-specific workers compensation regulations.