

Joint Health and Safety Committee – Creation Fact Sheets

HOW ARE MEMBERS ON THE COMMITTEE SELECTED?

Health and safety committee consists of worker (employee) and management members. Health and safety legislation specifies how the members on the committee are to be selected. Consult the legislation applicable to your workplace. Generally, the management members are selected by the management (employer). The worker members are selected by employees or by the union (if there is one).

Note: In Canada the name of the health and safety committee varies from one jurisdiction to another (see table below). In the following sections we will refer to them simply as committee.

Table 1 Title of Health and Safety Committee
Jurisdiction	Title
Canada: Federal	Work place health and safety committee
British Columbia	Joint health and safety committee
Alberta	Joint work site health and safety committee
Saskatchewan	Occupational health committee
Manitoba	Workplace safety and health committee
Ontario	Joint health and safety committee
Quebec	Health and safety committee
New Brunswick	Joint health and safety committee
Nova Scotia	Joint occupational health and safety committee
Prince Edward Island	Joint occupational health and safety committee
Newfoundland and Labrador	Occupational health and safety committee
Yukon	Joint health and safety committee
Northwest Territories	Joint occupational health and safety committee
Nunavut	Joint occupational health and safety committee

What is the ratio of management to labour members on the committee?

The laws typically state that there should not be more management members on the committee than worker members.

How do I know if the members on the committee are representative of the workplace?

The legislation or collective agreement may specify a minimum and/or maximum number of members usually dependent on the number of workers at the site. Too few workers may mean that all segments of the work force are not represented, while too many members may make the committee hard to manage, resulting in more debate and less action. In deciding the ideal committee size, consider:

- Total number of workers.
- Number of different trades or unions involved.
- Complexity of the operation.
- Degree of hazard in work.
- Whether all segments of work force are represented (management, supervisors, male workers, female workers, office staff).
- Whether the committee encompasses adequate knowledge of conditions, processes, practices.

Are members trained or certified in health and safety?

Members should be adequately trained in health and safety in order for them to contribute fully to all committee activities. In some jurisdictions, safety training or certification is required by law for employer and worker members. Items in such training should include:

- Committee responsibilities/authority.
- Occupational health and safety law.
- Principles of incident causation and/or hazard control.
- Hazard recognition.
- Job safety analysis.
- Occupational/industrial hygiene.
- Methods of raising safety awareness.
- Inspections.
- Incident or injury investigation.
- Effective oral communication.

Do members have to have relevant work experience and/or training?

Legislation does not require specific qualifications of committee member. However, employees with varied work backgrounds and those involved in hazardous and complex operations will usually be able to contribute to the committee activities. Some jurisdictions have established mandatory training, or a minimum amount of training or education hours for committee members.

How long does one person serve on the committee?

In some Canadian jurisdictions, the term of office is specified. Where it is not specified, the term of office should be specified in the terms of reference for your committee. The term of office should strike a balance between a short term where a large number of people are introduced to the committee and safety and too long when enthusiasm may fade. No matter how long the term is, a staggered rotation is suggested so that new members come in while others continue such that no more than one half of the committee is new at any given time.

Table 3 Term of Office for HS Committee Members
Jurisdiction	Requirement

Canada Labour Code Part II	Section 135.1 Establishment mandatory  (14) Subject to subsections 134.1(7) and 135(10) and any regulations made under subsection 135.2(1), a committee shall establish its own rules of procedure in respect of the terms of office, not exceeding two years, of its members and the time, place and frequency of regular meetings of the committee and may establish any rules of procedure for its operation that it considers advisable.  Section 135.2 Regulations 135.2 (1) The Governor in Council may make regulations  (a) specifying the qualifications and terms of office of members of a committee;  (b) specifying the time and place of regular meetings of a committee;  (c) specifying the method of selecting employee members of a committee if employees are not represented by a trade union;  (d) specifying the method of selecting the chairpersons of a committee and their terms of office;  Section 136 Appointment of health and safety representative  136. (1) Every employer shall, for each work place controlled by the employer at which fewer than twenty employees are normally employed or for which an employer is not required to establish a work place committee, appoint the person selected in accordance with subsection (2) as the health and safety representative for that work place.  (11) The Governor in Council may make regulations specifying (a) the qualifications and term of office of a health and safety representative;
British Columbia Workers Compensation Act	131. (1) Subject to this Part and the regulations, a joint committee must establish its own rules of procedure, including rules respecting how it is to perform its duties and functions.
Alberta Occupational Health and Safety Act	24(1) Members of a joint work site health and safety committee or a health and safety representative hold office for a term of not less than one year and may continue to hold office until their successors are selected or appointed.  (2) Despite subsection (1), if a union exists and the union's constitution specifies a term of office for worker members of the joint work site health and safety committee or the health and safety representative, the term of office of the worker member or the health and safety representative is the term specified in the union's constitution, or if more than one union represents the workers, in accordance with an agreement among all of those unions.

Saskatchewan Occupational Health and Safety Regulations	39. (1) An employer or contractor who is required to establish a committee shall: (a) in designating the members: (i) select persons to represent the employer or contractor on the committee; and (ii) ensure that there is a sufficient number of members representing workers on the committee to equitably represent groups of workers who have substantially different occupational health and safety concerns; and (b) designate members for a term not exceeding three years. (2) Members of a committee hold office until a successor is designated, and may be re-designated for a second or subsequent term.
Manitoba Workplace Safety and Health Regulation	3.2 (1) A committee member is to serve for a term of two years and continues to hold office until reappointed or re-elected or until a successor is appointed or elected. (2) Despite subsection (1), if a union exists and the union's constitution specifies a term of office for worker members of the committee, the term of office of the worker member is the term specified in the union's constitution.
Ontario Guide for Joint Health and Safety Committees (JHSCs) and Representatives in the Workplace	The Act does not specify requirements relating to the terms of committee members. The Ministry of Labour recommends a term of at least one year. Where there is more than one worker member and one employer member, terms should be staggered to allow continuity. Vacancies should be filled as quickly as possible.
Quebec Regulation respecting health and safety committees	29. The workers' and employer's representatives on a committee shall perform their duties as long the employer, the certified association or the group of workers not represented by the certified association that appointed them remains authorized to do so and as long as they have not been replaced by the latter.
New Brunswick	Although there are no legal requirements for terms of reference for JHSCs, WorkSafeNB recommends that the committee define their mandate, composition, functions in a written terms of reference or policy.
Nova Scotia Occupational Health and Safety Act	30. (7) A committee shall establish its own rules of procedure and shall adhere to the applicable regulations. (9) The rules of procedure established pursuant to subsection (7) shall include an annual determination of the method of selecting the person or persons who shall (a) chair the committee; and (b) hold the position of chair for the coming year. (10) Where agreement is not reached on (a) the size of the committee; (b) the designation of employees to be members; or (c) rules of procedure, the Director shall determine the matter.
Prince Edward Island Occupational Health and Safety Act	25. (12) A committee shall establish its own rules of procedure.
Newfoundland and Labrador Occupational Health and Safety Act	No specific reference to length of office/renewal of term

Yukon	No specific reference to length of office/renewal of term
Northwest Territories	No specific reference to length of office/renewal of term
Nunavut	No specific reference to length of office/renewal of term

What is the safety professional's role with the HS Committee?

Those individuals with safety expertise, such as safety professionals, safety engineer, fire marshal, occupational health nurse, or occupational/industrial hygienist might serve as health and safety coordinators or resource persons who are available to help the committee. The duties of a qualified individual include:

- Informing employers and workers of the workplace hazards.
- Ensuring control measures are in place to protect employees against these hazards.

The committee should not be controlled by (or seen as controlled by) those with safety expertise, nor should the presence of this person on the committee create an unbalanced ratio between worker and employer representation.

The functions of the coordinator and the committee are closely intertwined, and their relationship must be clearly defined to prevent misunderstanding and conflict. It would seem logical that the coordinator should attend every committee meeting, but his/her role at these meetings may be that of resource person, advisor, or guest. For the purposes of determining attendance and quorum, it must be agreed what the role of this individual will be on the committee (e.g., ex officio/observer, voting member)

Can there be more than one committee at a workplace?

Depending on the number of workers, complexity of operations, or different locations, it may be appropriate to have more than one committee. In very large organizations, a tiered system of committees with a hierarchical reporting arrangement may be in place. For example, the Policy Health and Safety Committee in the Federal jurisdiction plays this role. This structure has the advantage of assuring full representation without too many members on a single committee.

Are members compensated for time spent on committee activities?

A committee member is entitled to take time from his/her regular work duties in order to carry out committee related responsibilities. In some jurisdictions, this is a legislated right (with pay) and includes time allocation to prepare for the meeting, the meeting itself, and any related activities (such as workplace inspections). With shiftwork, this provision is especially important to ensure full attendance at meetings and that all committee tasks are carried out.

Can the employer take discriminatory action against a committee member?

Reprisals against a health and safety committee member is against the law. An employer, any person acting on behalf of the employer, or any union cannot take discriminatory action against any worker because that person participates in the functions of the committee.

Is there a need to post and maintain records/documents of the meetings?

Minutes of all health and safety committee meetings are required. Some jurisdictions may require the use of specific forms. Some may require that the minutes be forwarded directly to the jurisdiction while others state the records must be made available when a government official or officer requests them. Regardless, keeping a good record of the activities and discussions of the joint health and safety committee is necessary to help ensure that each concern and resolution is documented. Minutes must also maintain confidentiality for individuals.

Minutes of meetings are generally circulated to all committee members after approval by both health and safety committee co-chairpersons. One copy should be posted in a prominent place in the workplace and the original kept with the records of the committee. It is recommended that the minutes be circulated to committee members and posted within a week from the meeting.

Minutes should be kept for a period of time. Some jurisdictions require this time to be at least 2 years.
