

National Day of Mourning – A Day to Remember

April 28, the National Day of Mourning, is a day to remember and honour those who have died or been injured on the job.

Years ago, I got a call that nobody wants to get. A close friend's father had fallen off the roof during an inspection – his injuries were too severe – he didn't survive the fall. I wish I could say this is rare – but it's not.

I have no idea what your schedule looks like for the 28th this year, but I strongly urge you to ensure it allows for some reflection. Take a moment to pause and think about why you do what you do. I promise, you won't be alone. That's because April 28, 2022, is the National Day of Mourning in which countries around the world commemorate the workers who died on the job.

Sadly, in 2020, across North America, it's estimated that over 5,000 workers lost their lives due to a workplace incident. It goes without saying that this number is too high. You've heard it all – accidents are preventable, safety isn't just a slogan etc. But do you really take it to heart? Have you ever had to make that call? To someone's wife, husband, mother, father, child?

Whatever your plans may be, take that moment to reflect on why this day is important and how you plan to ensure your workers, colleagues, friends are going to get home in one piece.

Here are some events you can attend virtually.

US

To mark the observance of Workers Memorial Day, Secretary of Labor Marty Walsh will join OSHA and others for an online national ceremony on April 28 at 1 p.m. ET. Visit OSHA's website to watch the event.

Canada

Federal

Alberta

BC

Manitoba

New Brunswick

Newfoundland/Labrador

Northwest Territories/Nunavut

Nova Scotia

Ontario

Prince Edward Island

Saskatchewan

Yukon